Protestor Nikki Craft Bearing Her Convictions

by On-the-Spot Scout - Bobby Cavigliano

In a protest move, seven women decided Saturday to bare all in a challenge to what they call sexist State nudity lasws. The group of Rochester women, along with a crowd estimated at 300 to 600 people (mostly men) were on hand to witness "The Rochester Seven" remove their shirts as an attack on the State law that allows men the comfort of removing their shirts, but specifically requires all females to remain fully clothed! All seven were arrested by Rochester City policemen. Ramona Santorelli, a 28 year old lifeguard, waitress, and feminist athlete, says the law is discriminatory, reflects a sexist and antiquated view of the breasts as sexual parts of a woman's body. Ramona reflects back on the time she was lying, her shirt removed, in the park behind the Rochester Museum and Science Center on East Ave., when security personnel asked her to put on her shirt or leave. "My God, I was on my stomach," Ramona said. "I was not lying there for all to see. But it was dress or leave. At the same moment, I looked up and there was a man walking through the park with no shirt on, wind in his hair, and it then struck me as an essence of freedom."

It was then and there that she began organizing support. She enlisted the help of Naturist Rochester, a nudist group, which just a few short years ago pushed for legalization, and successfully achieved it, over breast feeding in public.

The group has also enlisted the help of the American Civil Liberties Union (A.C.L.U.) to launch a massive attack on the constitutionality of N.Y. Nudity Laws in the wake of the arrests. The conviction on these charges mandates a $250 fine or 15 days in jail, neither of which this group of dedicated women believe in or care about.

Nikki Craft, the protest organizer who herself has been arrested 42 times and spent more than 3 months in jail, flew into Rochester from California, where she helped lead the fight against the 6th Annual Miss California Beauty Pageant. All her arrests were in direct response to her stand against pornography or in demonstrating for wholesome nudity.

Those seven arrested besides Craft and Santorelli were: Mary Lou Schloss, 38; Deborah A. Seymore, 34; Lynn E. Zacari, 24; Kathleen F. Reilly, 40; and Elise Jo Tooley, 27. They were taken from the scene to the Highland Section and given tickets ordering them to appear in City Court.
